

eyeopeners

Your guide to what's hot

ARIC CRABB — STAFF ARCHIVES

Go 'Wandering' with Bay Area choreographer Amy Seiwert

Grab your passport and let Bay Area choreographer Amy Seiwert take you on a tour of a distant land — still unknown except in your vivid imagination. For “Wandering,” Seiwert found inspiration in the song cycle for voice and piano “Winterreise” (Winter Journey) by Schubert. The lyrics, 24 poems by Wilhelm Müller, form a path of dark moods, lost love and loneliness. Seiwert’s first evening-length narrative ballet, with visual design by Brian Jones and costumes from Susan Roemer, promises to be anything but dreary. “This ballet explores the theme of going on a journey, both internally and physically,” she says. “How do we relate to the world, the world to us, how does the world around us change us, and how do we in return alter the world and our community?” Details: 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday, 7 p.m. Sunday; Cowell Theater at Fort Mason complex, San Francisco; $20-$50; <https://fortmason.org>.

— Aimee Tsao, Correspondent